PRINCETON SCORES ON LATERAL PASS

Pulmer Stadium, Princeton, Nov. 8.—There were close to 30,000 persons in the stands when Harvard and Princeton battled for football supremacy here this afternoon. It was one of the biggest football crowds which has seen a game this year.

Harvard was a 1 to 1 favorite in the betting when the game started. This was due chiefly to the superior backs and line of the Harvard team. Princeton's star player, Kack, Princeton's great guard, would be unable to play.

Princeton men refused to acknowledge that Harvard was almost sure to win. They kept reminding the supporters of the Crimson how Dame Fortune has always come to the aid Det. Nov. 8.—Coach Whelan's Tulsa players were a confident lot when they lined up against the University of Detroit eleven, though the latter were made the favorites in the betting before the game. The Detroit followers of football simply could not be made to see how the Red and White eleven, which consisted of Georgetown, was due for defeat.

Tulsa took the game over in the preliminary workout, their forwards and backs landing the ball with ease and covering punts in faultless fashion. Their backs were the main impression upon the big audience who

This Day in History—November 8, 1919

THIS is the anniversary of the death of John Milton, in 1641. The famous blind poet, who composed the wonderful "Paradise Lost" after his eyesight was gone, stands high not only as one of the greatest authors of all time, but as a patriot and a man who fought for freedom.

By COSMO HAMILTON

One of the most interesting and successful novelists of the day, whose stories are widely read both here and abroad.

LOVE and adore you, and to gather we can conquer the world. Come away with me, I claim you by right. You are as much mine now as if you had been married to me in church. Quickly! There's no time to waste!"

He got up and pulled her to her feet. His face was white and his eyes had gone black.

But she shook her head. "You don't really want to go," she said.

"Why not?"

"Because you love me too much." "I love you with my soul and body and brain, and I've only just begun to love you. You have the rest of my life in your hands."

"I believe you've had all mine and always," she said. "But don't you want to go?"

What Has Happened So Far

CLIVE HURBERT, brother of a duke, but debonair scion of the nobility and titles, without duties or responsibilities, is at Dover, on his way to Calais, when he is irresistibly attracted by a pretty girl in the dining room of the Lord Warden Hotel. He unconventionally introduces himself to her and she half-humorously accepts the adventure. They fall desperately in love, and he swears they have been chosen for each other. He begs her to elope with him.

A clear, incisive, rather high-pitched voice rang out: "Clive!"

Beef Tenderloin à la Stanley

Have a nice tenderloin cut in small steaks weighing ten ounces each. Broil them in a moderate fire for about fifteen minutes.

Time prepare some grated horseradish, mix it with a thick cream sauce (recipe No. 49). Prepare, also, as many halves of bananas as you have steaks; cut them lengthwise. When you have dipped them in cold milk and rolled in flour, fry in hot, clear grease and drain in a piece of cloth. When ready to serve pour the sauce over the steak and arrange the fried bananas over all. You can put a little thickened gravy around the steak if you desire.

"Which explains," David continued, "the good condition of this particular city. The overseas, in new. I bought it the day I left

New York for this town. If I had known how rich I was going to be with a chuckle, I might have paid more for it."

"I hardly think your desire for new clothes need move you to run off and get them immediately."

"You would certainly say so, wouldn't you?"

"Oh, well, I might as well take the buying business over now."

David bowed. "I shall see you

again by my return from New York."

"I don't know what you have planned, but I shall be glad to see you when you return."

"Then he had gone the lawyer and, still, thinking hard."

David bowed. "I shall see you

again by my return from New York."

Gold Beetles

It is interesting to know that there are insects in this world which are said to be gold producing. The most popular is the golden roachbeater. It is a very handsome yellow beetle, with a metallic lustre, and its size is about as big as the end of a man's thumb.

At the end of the terrace Clive slipped his arm through hers and looked at her with that intimate smile of his which had made several of the difficult passages of his life easy sailing.

THE WICKED MARQUIS By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

NEW NOVEL FROM THE PEN OF THE FAMOUS AUTHOR

SHE was a very pleasant type of young Englishwoman—distinctly pretty, fair-skinned, healthy and good humored. Notwithstanding the fact that her acquaintance was of the briefest, David was already conscious of her charm.

"You'll find me, in particular, very graying," she declared, as they entered the long, low hall. "I want to be over seventy when I die of you, so that daddy and I can have a real good two months in London. I don't believe you value the things of this life, do you?"

"Well, I am rather partial to 'bathrooms,' he confessed, "and I should have to take it away with you."

"You draw a sigh of relief."

"So long as you look upon the bathroom matter reasonably, I am quite sure we shall be friends."

"I am quite sure we shall be friends."

"I am quite sure we shall be friends."

Lasting Reforms Can Be Achieved Only Through Orderly Methods

Genuine working people sincerely interested in the best benefit of themselves and their country should keep out of the hands of professional agitators, and keep away from outdoor assemblies which have no police permits and which are likely to end in some sort of violent demonstration.

The only way that necessary reforms can be secured in this country is through orderly action and through an appeal to the justice and patriotism and common sense of the mass of the people.

Reforms must be made, the country must progress in the direction of democracy; the working classes, the producing classes, must receive their just proportion of the wealth created; but none of these objects can be accomplished through the violent methods advocated by extremists.

Indeed, it is obviously and undeniably the fact that any resort to extreme, violent methods would have just the opposite effect to the effect desired, would prejudice the mass of the people against the cause of the workers, would cause a reaction in favor of ultra-conservatism, would make the average citizen to "play safe" by taking any course—no matter whether he agreed fundamentally with it or not—that was opposed to violence and disorder.

The worst enemies of legitimate progress are the violent extremists, whose doctrines tend to prejudice the reasonably conservative elements of the community against even proper, progressive measures.

This country is in a prosperous condition; the average citizen is fairly prosperous. He may not have all that he wants, all that he needs, all that he should have; but he certainly ought not to jeopardize—and he certainly will not jeopardize—the substantial prosperity that he has in an effort to secure more through some visionary scheme or through some impossible program of violence and disorder.

Without the sympathy and co-operation of this average citizen no cause can move to success in this country; and any cause will be crushed to the ground under the weight of his disapproval, and active and militant opposition, which does not appeal to his sense of fairness and justice, and which does not correspond to his ideas of patriotism and true Americanism.

This typical, average citizen and his family are nine-tenths of the people of the United States. They are more than one hundred millions of the one hundred and ten millions of our population.

"The Communists of Wealth," as Cleveland called them, who assail our American system from above, and the anarchists of discontent and disorder, who assail our system from below, are a small part of our population. Both are opposed to genuine democracy and to the general welfare of the people.

Both should be compelled to surrender to a thoroughly American system of republican government and made to serve the interests of the whole people.

This object the vast majority of judicious American citizens—one hundred millions strong—can accomplish, and will accomplish, through the orderly methods of our established popular government.

Every intelligent citizen, every patriotic citizen, be he workingman or capitalist, should ally himself with this great body of typical American citizens and proceed to accomplish necessary reforms through the peaceful and orderly methods of our American form of government.

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

We Should Never Be Unprepared to Defend Our Rights Upon the Seas

Expert naval opinion is agreed that for a well-rounded service our navy, at its present stage of development, should, on a peace basis, have approximately 183,000 men, distributed as follows:

Afloat	110,000
At shore establishments	30,000
Apprentice seamen and firemen under training	24,000
In trade schools	14,000
For hospital corps	5,000

Such a total of man power is not more than sufficient to preserve our naval establishment at a good standard of efficiency, in continual readiness to meet regular peace duties and also to take care of emergencies while the reserves are being summoned.

It constitutes even in time of profound calm a warranted insurance of security.

To undertake to hold our first line of defense at this period of world unrest with a man power far below the peacetime normal would be worse than unwise. It would be unjustifiable.

Yet that is precisely what the present Congress, by its adjustment of the naval appropriation, has decreed should be done.

When the armistice was signed our navy had a total man power of 509,000, consisting of 218,000 regulars and 291,000 reserves.

Then came the natural pressure for the swift release of men who had enlisted for the emergency, as well as the desire for prompt economy.

With both of these the country sympathized.

It was, however, the duty of the government to comply with discretion.

Instead, the Congress swung backward to an extreme. On October 28 last all but 8,000 reserves had been released, while of the regulars only 110,000 remained.

Of these 110,000 regulars 60,700 represent new enlistments, many untrained. In our navy today, where the minimum need is above 180,000 men, we have only about 44,000 experienced men.

Of our total present enlisted strength of 118,000 men, 40,000 are in the shore establishments, either under training, in trade schools or of the operating force on shore, leaving only 78,000 for the fleets.

With every continent and every ocean, carrying menace to American interests and the lightning of future war flashing on each horizon, this excessive reduction of our mobile naval power spells a danger which this nation cannot afford to take.

One instance of the heedlessness with which the Congress has ordered naval demobilization should be cited.

Senator La Follette had a friend serving in the Medical Corps who wanted to get out. He had enlisted prior to April 7, 1917, for four years. His status was not that of a man who had enlisted for the war only, for he had gone in before we went to war. There were 12,400 men in the navy in like condition—men who had enlisted between February 3 and April 7, 1917, perhaps hoping to get into the war, but taking an unqualified obligation to serve, if needed, for the full period of their enlistment.

So when the naval maintenance bill came into the Senate from the House, which had voted release for men who had enlisted for the duration of the war, Senator La Follette moved and the Senate adopted an amendment extending this release to all the 12,400 men who had enlisted before the war, thus cutting a great gap in the naval personnel.

No great organization like our navy can be expected to maintain itself at the needed standard of efficiency upon such a basis of futility.

There should be a definite policy, based on judgment, not personal caprice, and once begun, it should be maintained consistently.

We cannot afford ever to be unready to defend our rights upon the sea.

Such a man is Professor Herman H. Chapman, a candidate for the conservation commissionership of the State. And he is a Massachusetts man. His work in the Yale School of Forestry, in Minnesota and in New Mexico and Arizona while in the employ of the United States Government, was crowned with practical and financial success for the government.

He ran a timber business for the government in the national forests under his management that netted the government hundreds of thousands of dollars profit.

His work stamps him as the right kind of big man for this big job.

Prof. Chapman Right Kind of Man for This Job

There's a big job waiting in this State for a big man. We refer to the job of heading the new department of conservation. Speculation has been keen as to whom Governor Coolidge will appoint to this position of State-wide importance.

Who has not noticed in riding or driving through the country districts the enormous amount of waste land stretching along the State highways? Needless of our national resources, we have allowed this land to be denuded of growth of any value.

A million acres of waste land needs only intelligent reforestation to provide more than enough lumber to supply the manufacturing purposes of the State. A practical man can do this and make money for the State.

What Armistice Day Means

By Maj.-Gen. C. R. Edwards, U. S. A.

Commanding the Northeastern Department

EVERY clock on the eleventh day of November recalls the fact that those stout-hearted lads on the first line did not know whether to cry or laugh.

The compromise was silence.

In each man's heart was the sacred silence that to a general who knows the strain of ten months where men expected to die any day it was merely the manifestation of their tribute to the Almighties who had put victory where it belonged. No cheers followed, the one thought in their minds was their home and the great reward was the consciousness of day's duty for duty's sake, the only compensation to the soldier that makes it the grandest profession in the world.

In commemoration of this spirit of self sacrifice and endeavor future generations should learn this day's expression of sentiment.

Let the American public rejoice on this day for a worthy cause well won, and let us bow in reverence and breathe a prayer for those departed heroes whose bodies lie in Flanders fields and whose names are hushed but whose memory will live forever in our hearts and in the hearts of future generations.

Letters to the Editor

Plea for Fresh Air

Editor Boston American:

This is a foolish word. We appropriate large sums of money for the preservation of public health and the investigation of disease, and yet we daily ignore some of the fundamental causes of sickness and ill-health. From thirty to fifty cubic feet of fresh air is required to maintain a fair degree of health for each individual. We cannot get this amount all the time of our existence upon this planet, but there is no reason why we shouldn't get a fair proportion of it.

This is about the only thing under the sun that you don't have to buy or be taxed for—yet.

We poor mortals are apt to complain when we catch "cold" or are made sick as a result of a lowered vitality of our precious bodies, but we make no protest when we are packed into stuffy, evil-smelling, disease-breeding "airtight" cars on the Boston Elevated system. Some of these cars smell worse than the bank room of a Shanghai opium den, and yet there is no complaint upon the part of the long-suffering public. Most of the people who travel in such cars would make a "rumpus" if such a condition existed in their homes, but I suppose it is all right on the Elevated.

Surely, Mr. Editor, it is not logical for us to put up with such disease-breeding influences when they can be so easily corrected. I am sure that a few words of instruction by the Elevated officials to the conductors would have the desired effect.

Our conductors are not expert hygienists or sanitarians and cannot be expected to know everything about ventilation of public vehicles. The "side-ventilators" at the top of the cars should always be open wide, also the rear window at the end of the cars. This would create a vacuum which would suck out the carbonized air and allow for its proper replacement with fresher air. As a practical physician with a little regard for the health of the community, I implore you to give this your earnest consideration. Surely you will do something to wake up this official to a proper realization of this evil. Public health should be our first consideration.

Ministers Take Courage and Demand Decent Pay

NEW ENGLAND ministers, taking heart from the support given their case by the Boston Sunday Advertiser, have abandoned their policy of self-effacement and are now demanding decent pay. They are pleading their own cause with the same vigor with which they have pleaded every other worthy cause.

The Right Rev. Edwin Hughes, Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, has written for tomorrow's Boston Sunday Advertiser a paragraph which illustrates the situation of the retired pastor and points out the duty of New England congregations. "Bitty" Sunday, the evangelist, adds his plea for an adequate pension system.

The Rev. L. J. Birney, dean of Boston University School of Theology, declares: "The unvarnished truth must be faced. Many retired clergymen are abjectly poor and full of woe. Conditions that they and their dependents must ultimately become objects of charity, clergyman are despoiling the ranks. It is time that the church wake up. It is time that the laity assume its rightful burden."

How shall we boost Boston? This is the question now more than ever agitating the minds of city officials and leaders of trade and industry. With thirty-nine municipalities ten miles from the State House, forming one great metropolis geographically, but having separate governments, the city of Boston staggering under the burden of State and metropolitan taxes, yet having no say as to its own future, some remedy must be found to conserve and build up the industries and commerce of the metropolis.

Mayor Petter, President Ford of the City Council and others took significant articles in the Boston Sunday Advertiser where the trustees list and the answer must be done before Boston can assert its true metropolitan rank among American trade centers.

Supreme Court Justice Daniel P. Cohan of New York writes a powerful article, showing how the new article has already begun. The struggle between America and England now is not an economic one, he asserts. Justice Cohan appeals to the United States Senate to safeguard the sovereignty of America and the peace of the world by rejecting British plans for world domination contained in the League of Nations covenant.

"We should secure real freedom of the seas by an international conference for naval disarmament," he insists, and points out the growing menace to the United States of the English navy. Justice Cohan shows how a free Ireland would prove an open gateway for American commerce in all parts of Europe and tells why Erin should be controlled by people friendly to all of Europe and not to England alone.

England, treading the road to ruin, covets America, warns Ray Long, who has just returned from a study of conditions abroad. He expresses the motives underlying British propaganda for an alliance with the United States and for a cancellation of England's war debts in this country.

"Japan won the war—and for herself," declares President Lunsell H. Murlin of Boston University, who has just returned from a study of conditions abroad. He expresses the motives underlying British propaganda for an alliance with the United States and for a cancellation of England's war debts in this country.
